Earlham's Emergency Response and Recovery Planning (ERRP) team continues to monitor information from local, state and federal health organizations concerning the spread of the Ebola virus. The College is prepared to follow our pandemic action plan pertaining to any outbreak of illness. Should any signs of Ebola present itself on campus, the College would immediately quarantine the patient and transfer them to a health care facility and notify outside health organizations. The College asks that anyone who has traveled from an affected country or been in contact with someone who has Ebola to self-monitor their temperature for 21 days (per Centers for Disease Control recommendations). The Health Services department has an ample supply of disposable thermometers available to students, employees and guests for self-monitoring.
